A multi-state alliance offering fully online graduate programs

Prospective Students

Are you looking for a graduate degree or graduate certificate in community development, dietetics, family and consumer sciences education, family financial planning, food safety & defense, gerontology, merchandising or youth development?

In a multi-institution degree program, you apply and are admitted at one university; enroll in all your courses at that university; and graduate or receive a certificate from that university. Your online courses are taught by the best faculty in the discipline from several universities.

Are you seeking certification/licensure in family and consumer sciences education?

The Family and Consumer Sciences Education Program Consortium universities collaborate to help you find online courses to meet teacher certification/licensure requirements. Click on the Course Catalog link to your left. Select "family and consumer sciences teacher education" from the drop-down box to view course titles and descriptions. If you are working towards a degree you may also find courses that would fulfill some of the content area requirements for your state.

Are you looking for an online course?
