Course Description and Objectives

Applied music composition lessons are designed to help students better hone their skills as composers. In order to satisfy recital requirements, composition majors are expected to produce as much music as possible during a semester. Eight to ten minutes of music composed is considered to be a minimum amount of work for a semester, depending on several factors to be agreed upon with your instructor. Do not come to your lessons unprepared. Composition forum will meet once a week, and focus on specific compositional skills, techniques, etc.

Attendance

You are allowed one forum absence. If you are unprepared for a lesson, please notify your instructor well in advance so that he may cancel your lesson.

Forum Participation

Each student will be required to present at forum at least once a school year. This can be a discussion of your own work, or of another composer's. Audio examples are more than welcome, but you should be prepared to talk extensively about the music and answer questions.

Listening

Listening will be asked of you throughout the semester. This will be required listening, and will effect your grade.

Journal

You will be required to keep a detailed daily journal recording the amount of time you composed each day and what you worked on. The journal should also include information such as where you were having trouble, where you'd like to begin the following day, etc., and be used for taking notes on the required listening.

Jury

At the end of each semester, all students except those students who have given a degree recital must appear before a jury of the Composition Faculty. The jury session will last approximately 30 minutes during which the student will present his or her work and answer any questions the jury may ask concerning it.

You should have 5 (five) copies of legible, bound, two-sided score(s) available. You will need to present your piece either by performing it, bringing an audio or midi CD recording, or flash drive (no other media will be accepted).

Factors the jury and your instructor considers when determining the final grade include: the quality and quantity of the music written during the semester, the difficulty of the medium composed for, the number of performances of original music during the semester, growth and improvement, the quality and quantity of work relative to other students' work at the same level, and participation in the life of the division (attendance at composition forums, composer recitals, etc.).
